Fresh Fish
And Ol' Deacency
From Deacy's Cooke's Corner...

Beautiful fresh fish, straight from the Atlantic will be on sale daily at Galway's latest fish shop, Neil and Peggy Deacy's, Cooke's Corner. Fresh fish has become more popular in recent years because of its excellent taste, food value and of course reared in the wild far from drugs, colourizers or preservatives. Galway was once famous for its fish and that fame has now returned with Neil and Peggy. Neil comes from three generations of fish merchants. His great-grandfather John Conroy had a large fish business in Quay Street (opposite McDonagh's), and that business continued by his daughters, especially Polly, who married George Deacy, and their son, in his turn, trained Neil in the ancient arts of filleting, curing, and barrelling. Neil has been aware for years that many people in the West of Ireland miss not only a continuous supply of good, thick fresh fish daily, but the old tastes they once loved: old style cured ling and cod and barrel herrings. Neil is already filling out orders for the same and he invites customers to enjoy once a piece of ol' deacency from Deacy's! His wife, Peggy, speaks beautiful Irish and will have a special welcome for customers who wish to conduct their business in the language of the people. The shop is open daily at Cooke's Corner (formerly Gavins Fitted Kitchens), and ideally situated for busy housewives and shoppers. Prompt and efficient at all times.
